ALLIANCE DEPARTMENT.

[White newspaper men are not eligible to membership in the Farmers' Alliance, if they even wished to become such, we feel it our duty to reserve a portion of the Car for the farmers. Here they can freely express their views in such matters as will tend to better their condition, and publish full reports of their meetings. Correspondence for this department is invited, but whatever expression may be found or sentiment upheld, it is understood that the editor of the Car is not responsible therefor, nor is it an indication that these views are his views. The farmers' interests are ours to a great extent, and we freely do what we can to assist them in their struggle for homes and rights.—ED.]

STRAWBERRIES.

BUREAU OF SOUTHERN NEWS.)

J. T. PATRICK, General Manager, Raleigh, N. C. It has been said that God might have made a better berry than the strawberry, but. He never did. One thing is certain, no berry has so strong a hold upon the human sense of taste as the strawberry. Whether it grows in the valley or on the mountain in grassy meadow or in old whether it grows in the valley or on the mountain; in grassy meadow or in old field; in the home, or in the market garden; whether ripened under the sun's kisses and wild breezes of nature, or under the more careful culture of well kept fields; it has the most delicious flavor of all berries; and humanity smacks its lips over that flavor in the last one and wishes for more. Only a few days since we saw a person who had never eaten a strawberry. Until within a few years a very large portion of the people of the South never saw a strawberry; there are still many who never tasted one. But this condition is rapidly passing away. It has now been demonstrated by suc-It has now been demonstrated by suc-cessful trial, that this paragon of berries may not only be produced all over the South, but also produced with a gil:-edged profit. A story has been told of the man who, bound to eat strawberries enough for one year, began in Florida to eat them in April; and moving north-ward as the crop ripened, closed up the happy undertaking in northern New York in July. Such lingering sweetness long drawn out, and a strawberry shortcake three months long is not only pos-sible but common to the citizens of New York. Their last berries come to them from their own state. But whence do they get the first? Those for which they pay one dollar a basket, or five cents a place? pay one doing a classet, of we cents a piece? There can be only one answer: from the South. The sentimental phil-anthropist of the North may lie awake nights over the mistaken idea that there is a race problem in the South; but he makes no mistake when he carries home to his tea table his baskets of luscious strawberries, which both races in the South have worked together harmonious-ly to produce and send to him. The over zealous editor who never goes, or sees, or knows beyond the smoke of his own pipe may write savage editorials on a South-ern policy which ought to be; and yet, he is put into good humor with himself and all mankind besides, when a com-mon sense Southern policy, seeking his money rather than his brains, makes it money rather than his brains, makes it possible for some fair maid, at a country fair, to serve him with a dish of soul satisfying strawberries and cream. The loud mouthed country-saving politician may damn the South because she don't vote to suit him, but she'll just fill his capacious mouth with strawberry short-capacious mouth with dear friends at the North, in spite of her multitude of sins you will still buy the berries which the South raises for you; and pay for them too. And that is just the point we wish to press upon many of you, who can't stay where you are and don't know what to do anywhere else. don't know what to do anywhere else. In the profits of raising strawberries. Dr. McKay, of Mississippi, one of the most successful fruit growers in the South, writes thus: "It was not generally believed that our southern soil and climate able are the ways of Divine Providence, lieved that our southern soil and climate were well adapted to the growth and per-fection of the more tender and delicate small fruits. The first efforts to grow them on a liberal scale met with ridicule from even the most intelligent fruit growfrom even the most intelligent fruit grow-ers, and the fruit commission merchants of distant cities. In 1875, having one acre, good stand, in choice shape, I be-gan picking about the 20th of April, and shipping to Chicago, St. Louis, and Cin-cinnati; and when I closed my last shipments, which were sent to Vicksburg about the middle of June, I had gathered and shipped 3200 quarts, netting me over $1200. This success removed all doubts and silenced all sneers, as to the adaptation of our soil and climate and the carrying quality of the berry, when gathered at the right stage and properly have rying quality of the berry, when gather-ed at the right stage and properly han-dled and packed. From a few acres, probably not over ten, in Milan, in Ten-nessee, to Lake Maushae, Louisiana, forty miles above New Orleans, its cul-ture has increased until it is now estimated at full 1000 acres along the line of the Ilinois Central railroad. The writer having increased his to about thirty-five acres; the net proceeds being diminished with increased culture." In spite of increased culture and competition, we know of men who are still growing rich from the culture of strawberries. Remember. that in this business, the first sales bring the largest profits. The South makes the first sales.

Peanuts.

BUREAU OF SOUTHERN NEWS,
J. T. PATRICK, Gen'l Manager,
Raleigh, N. C.
"Here's Honest John with nice fresh peanuts hot from the roaster. A large paper of peanuts for five cents. Who has the next? You? Here you are." Such were the words we once heard on the grand stand at a county fair in nor-thern New York, as "Honest John" sold bushel after bushel of these nuts which are not nuts, and peas which are not peas.

"I've four bushels of ground peas; do you want to buy them?" These words we heard in a store in a southern town. These little incidents indicate in some degree the extent of the consumption of these nuts, and the different names applied to them. While generally recog-nized by the name of peanuts, they are nized by the name of peanuts, they are also known as earthauts, groundnuts, ground peas and goobers. No word fully and correctly names them. They have a fibrous shell, like some nuts; but they do not grow like nuts.

The plant is an annual creeping vine, bearing a cluster of fibrous shells, containing loose di-cotyledonous seeds, at or just below the surface of the earth.

Hence the names of earthnuts, ground peas, etc. If a nut, it is unlike all other nuts in being an annual plant, and in bearing its fruit below the whole body of the plant. If a pea it is unlike all other peas for the last reason just named, and because its seeds are loose in a hard shell. because its seeds are loose in a hard shell. But whatever they are, whether nuts or peas, or both or neither, everybody likes and eats them. "Where was John yesterday?" we inquired of a gentleman whose son we had missed from his usual place the day before. "He was sick yesterday. He went to the fair the day before and at a too many peanuts. He can whose son we had missed from his usual place the day before. "He was sick yesterday. He went to the fair the day before and ate too many peanuts. He can no more keep from eating peanuts when he sees them, than a pig can help eating corn." We incline to the opinion that the human taste for peanuts is about as natural as the pig's taste for corn. But pigs like peanuts too. One writer of authority on the paying crops of the South, says of Spanish peanuts: "They are superior to all other varieties of peanuts. They will do well on poorer land than any other variety, and will produce from two to three tons of forage per acre, and from forty to sixty bushels of nuts.

from two to three tons of forage per acre, and from forty to sixty bushels of nuts, thirty pounds to the bushel. The forage is superior to have as food for stock, and especially for cows giving milk. The especially for cows giving milk. The nuts are worth fully double as much as corn for fattening pigs or other animals.

The nuts sell at the highest price and will average from one dollar to one dollar and fifty cents per bushel. If raised for stock food, simply mow the vines when the nuts are rice, and turn the nice. when the nuts are ripe, and turn the pigs into the field and they will do their own digging. If the nuts are to be saved, plow up the vines and nuts, and with a fork lift the vines from the ground, shake off the dirt, and place in shocks to cure, as they will cure better and whiter than if left on the ground. The nuts will be ready to pick in about ten days.

Peanuts are about the same trouble to raise as potatoes, and one man can cultivate forty acres. The value of the forage from such a field, at ten dollars per ton, would be eight to twelve hundred dollars; and the nuts from forty acres would bring from two to three thousand would bring from two to three thousand dollars; averaging twenty-five hundred dollars net profit from one man's work."

Peanuts can be raised anywhere that Irish potatoes will grow, provided Jack Frost does not interfere. But cold blooded Jack is King for a part of the year in the Northern states, and the peanut, like many other profitable crops in the South, shrinks from his withering touch. They have been raised by amateur gardners in northern New York; but owing to the risks of cold, will not be a paying crop north of Virginia. paying crop north of Virginia.

In Memoriam.

VALPARAISO, IND., May 15, 1890. Baum.—At Rexford, Kans.. on May 5th, after a lingering illness, Laura M., the beloved wife of G. M. Baum, aged 30 years, and 9 months.

Leaves have their time to fall,
And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath,
But thou, thou hast all seasons for thine own,
Oh, Death!

How truthfully the thought expressed in the above lines comes home to our minds when from our midst some one near and dear has been ruthlessly called by the cold, stern hand of death. The first dawn of spring, the summer's gold en noontide, the mournful haze of aut-um, or the hoary frosts of winter afford alike to him ample opportunity for the merciless sweep of his keen, unerring scythe. Were not death viewed from a supernatural or higher plane than that from which we observe most other material changes, it would indeed seem dif-ficult to reconcile the judgement of man with the justice of God. While we see on all sides the useless, the aged, and evcause to mourn. Such was the case with the subject of this sketch. A young woman just blossomed into the first years and expect many more in the next two and man can only bow to its decree. The deceased, whose maiden name was Laura M. LaPorte, was a native of Valparaiso, Ind., until June 8, 1886, when she was married to G. Monroe Baum, of Hubbell, Neb., but latterly of Rexford, Kansas, whence they went, expecting to make their future home. Then to her life opened with bright prospects of health and happiness. This was not to be but for a few short years, when her health began to fail, and despite all the care of a lov-ing husband and kind friends, calmly and pracefully she passed away to meet we trust, from the hands of her God. in another and better world the reward of a well spent life. To the bereaved hus-band, little daughter, mother, brother band, little daughter, mother, brother and sisters, in their sorrow, words of comfort are unavailing. The healing hand of Him alone can soften the anguish experienced by those who feel so terribly the desolation of a once happy home, brightened as it was by the presence of wife and mother. Of one so well known and universally esteemed by the citizens of Valparaise, Ind., it seems almost needless to say anything in praise; but this humble tribute is offered only as a memento from one who mourns her loss. Let us remember that in reality she is not dead, only transplanted from this earthly pilgrimage to the soul's eternal
